

As an avid radio listener, I am troubled by the ever increasing number of so-called "low power" FM translators cropping up. Many interfere with reception of full-service and licensed commercial/non-commercial stations trying to reach their local community as opposed to satellite-fed "translators" originating from thousands of miles away. With the advent of LPFM, its time to reign-in so-called "translators". Let them deliver programming via Sirius or XM where they belong and stop crowding the FM band.
